Marie Nichols's Violin Recital.

Marie Nichols, a fair young American violinist, whose future promises to be a most brilliant one, appeared in an admirable recital last night at the Propylaeum, under the auspices of the Central College of Music. The young artist, fair of face and of charming personality, has won her first laurels in Europe, where she has studied for several years, and where she made her initial concert tour, and her fame has preceded her to her native land in the foreign correspondence of the American musical journals. Last night's audience, which was made up of the more earnest concert-goers and music students, and which was not nearly so large as the sterling merit of the event warranted, was prepared to listen to the playing of a genuine virtuoso, but it is doubtful if many in the assembly had looked forward to the exceptionally fine performance to which they were treated.

Miss Nichols really belongs in the foremost rank, not only of women performers, but of the world's violinists. She has the tone and style, and these two arts are joined together in her by grace and elegance and purity of sound. Her supple bowing, wonderful phrasing and beautiful tone touch at once the heart of her audience and caused her hearers to forget the instrument itself while drinking in the beautiful music which she plays. Her delicate, poetic tones betray what has been called "the musical soul." But she has fire in her, too, and also marvelous accuracy and brilliancy of execution—in fact, she seems to have all the qualities that contribute to make her a truly great artist.

There was nothing experimental about Miss Nichols's playing last evening. The able blond woman, slight of figure and of interesting stage presence, played with absolute authority, being perfectly in command of her ability to carry out successfully the programme that had been mapped out for her. She captured her audience completely before her recital was well under way, for her listeners learned at the very outset that the tones which she drew from the strings were pure and clear, and being assured upon this all-important point, they were in the mood to give themselves to the music.

Miss Nichols played seven programme numbers and granted two encore selections. She chose Tartin's Sonata in G minor to disconcert her audience and render the four widely different movements in finished style. She was not pyrotechnic, nor did she strive for effects, either in the number or in the Mendelssohn Concerto, her other important reading, which she gave later on in the programme, but she revealed true understanding and got at the beauty to be had from the instrument. Her other selections were "Granados," "Siciliano," "Galliard," "Hornpipe," a "Tangue," a theme with variations by Corelli, a romance by Evensend, and a "Lullaby" by Tivadas Natchez which was down on the printed programme as "Twelfth Night." The entire programme was given in a simple, straightforward manner, without the frills and affectations so common in violin virtuosity, and at the same time the various works were played with such interpretation that the audience was completely charmed.

"Twelfth Night" This Evening.

This evening, at English's, Viola Allen will appear before Indianapolis playgoers for the first time as a Shakespearean heroine, enacting the role of Viola (after whom she was named, by the way) in that most charming of all classic comedies, "Twelfth Night." Miss Allen is a great local favorite, and indications point to an audience to-night that will completely fill the theater. She has long been awaiting a favorable opportunity to interpret Shakespeare and her production of "Twelfth Night" this season has been a labor of love for her. She has met with substantial reward, however, as her engagements in all of the principal cities have been more than usually successful. Miss Allen's revival of the beautiful play is being given with magnificent scenic equipment and a supporting company that is credited with being excellent in every particular. Clarence Hays, a well-known character actor, portrays Sir Toby Belch and John Blair, a prominent Shakespearean player, impersonates Malvolio. Miss Zeffie Tibbory, a daughter of Lydia Thompson, and a young actress of much talent, appears as Maria, and the other leading roles are taken by Scott Chaven, James Young, Nora O'Brien and Frank Carter.

Samuel Peips was about the only critic on record who failed to enjoy "Twelfth Night." When that actor, who is a dramatist first saw the piece in the September of 1881, and could not find it consistent to approve what he thought "one of the least plays that I ever saw on the stage," not another notable theatergoer of old London Town expressed himself other than delighted with the comedy. Down, in 1892, tells that "Twelfth Night, or What You Will," wrote by Master Shakespeare, was mighty successful at its first performance, and from him we learn that Betterton played Sir Toby, the fool being taken by Mr. Underhill and Malvolio by Mr. Lovell. He does not say who played Viola, but it is thought that the part was taken by either Mrs. Betterton or Mrs. Barry. It has been recently stated that Viola was the first role to be assumed by a woman, but Robert W. Lowe, in his history of the life of Thomas Betterton names Desdemona as the first and Mrs. Hudson as the actress who played the character. Dr. Johnson in 1765 said of "Twelfth Night": "This play is in general very elegant and easy, and in some of the lighter scenes, exquisitely humorous. Schlegel describes the comedy as 'uniting the entertainment of an intrigue, contrived with great ingenuity, to the richest fund of comic characters and situations, and the beautiful colors of an ethereal poetry.' Hazlitt considered it 'one of the most delightful of Shakespeare's comedies—if not, indeed, the most delightful of all.'

Dramatic and Music Notes.

Elizabeth Murray, the well-known singer, who had been engaged for the leading part in the new comedy by Richard Carle, "The Maid and the Mummy," soon to be produced in Chicago, is suffering from severe nervousness and has been compelled to give up the part. Pearl Andrews, another recruit from the vaudeville stage, is to play the role instead. If Carle's new piece proves to be the success anticipated it will have a long run in Chicago. Many of the principals engaged for "The Mummy and the Maid" are accompanying Richard Carle on his present tour. "The Tenderfoot" will be in this city the latter part of next week, when that popular musical comedy plays a return engagement at English's. The performers who are to create the leading characters in the new piece are obliged to travel with Mr. Carle so that he may rehearse them in their parts.

William H. Crane, the veteran comedian, has gone abroad for the express purpose of witnessing the production in Paris of the play in which he is to appear in this country next season—the comedy, "Business as Usual." Mr. Crane is now enjoying a long run at the Comedie Francaise, after seeing the French production it is Mr. Crane's intention to tour in "Business as Usual," where a German version of the play is being acted with much success. It is believed that "Business as Usual" will prove just the proper play for Mr. Crane. He has been sorely in need of a good vehicle, ever since he shelved "David Harum."

When Herbert Kealey and Effie Shannon go on the road next September they will appear in an English version of a play entitled "Tattoo," which was recently produced in New York by the German company at the Irving-place Theater. This play, in its English form, will have its first presentation in September.

Frank Willsch, Viola Allen's business manager, states that the lately published report that Samuel F. Nixon, of the firm of Nixon & Zimmerman, would be Miss Allen's manager next season is only partially true. During the present season the actress will be managed by Mr. Willsch, but by her brother, Charles W. Allen, Mr. Nixon has been very desirous of becoming

At English's This Evening in "Twelfth Night."

Interested in Miss Allen's tour in the future and an arrangement was recently effected by which he will acquire a half interest in Miss Allen's tours during the next three years. Mr. Allen, however, to retain the sole and direct management of his sister's affairs. Mr. Nixon, besides being a very wealthy man, is one of the six members of the theatrical syndicate which practically controls the bookings in all of the large cities of the country. He is sole owner of the Nixon Theater in Pittsburgh, which is generally conceded to be one of the finest playhouses in the world, and is interested, as junior partner, in several theaters in New York city and Philadelphia.

Alice Kathryn Berry, a mite of an artist who plays juvenile roles and does singing specialty turns with the Golden Stock Company, is singing "Has Your Mother Any More Like You?" and "Hannah, Won't You Open That Door?" in "Blue Jeans" this week, and she has won encore after encore. She is as much of a funmaker as she is a singer, and her make-believe quarrels with the leader of the orchestra have raised much laughter. This little girl is just what the young men, and if she bears out her present promise the theatrical world will yet hear from her in more pretentious efforts. She will change her songs each week, those to be next week being "All Aboard for Dreamland," "Barney" and "Navy."

The programme for the Musikverein concert to-morrow evening at the German House promises to be one of the most attractive ever offered by that admirable musical society. The selections will be the following:

- Overture, "Rienzi".....Wagner
- Kirmess, from "Faust".....Gounod
- Mixed Chorus, "The Merry Widow".....Strauss
- "Toreador" from "Carmen".....Bizet
- Cavatina, from "The Song of Shalva".....Gounod

Mme. Schumann-Heink, who is to give a song recital at English's Opera House on Friday evening of next week, encourage young women to take up music as a profession. "Women have won distinction in every branch of the art," she says. "They have succeeded conspicuously as singers, pianists, violinists, cellists and as composers. I have sung with clubs conducted by a woman and with an orchestra composed of women, even to the tympani player. The American girls are endowed with more vocal organs, and among them we must look for the great voices of the future. But they are eager to win at the least the highest honors. They seek a teacher—most important of decisions—almost diffidently. The good teacher is a rare and precious thing. He is a student I say, search patiently for one of them. Then downright hard work and perseverance are the essentials to success."

Death of Margaret Eddings.
Friends in this city yesterday received news of the death in Colorado of Margaret Eddings, on May 5. Miss Eddings recently went to Colorado Springs in the hope that her health might be benefited. She was a member of the first graduating class of the Training School for Nurses, and was successful in her chosen profession until her health began to fail, three years ago.

Craig's candles are certainly good.
